Event Proposal

Last summer, King Abdullah of Saudi Arabia made an agreement with President Bush to increase the number of Saudi Students coming to USA, and as a result, Saudi Arabia decided to launch approximately ~5000 scholarships for Saudi students every semester to come and study in the USA during the coming five years.

These scholarships were in 14 technical fields related to medicine, engineering and technology. During the current spring semester, there were about 50 Saudi Students who ended up in different schools and Universities around Pittsburgh and more are expected to come in the next few years.

This increased flux of students encourages us to organize programs and events that would provide cultural exchange between Saudi and American Students to promote better understanding for each other which is one of the prime objectives of the Saudi Students House in Pittsburgh since education and awareness are ways to empower peace and tolerance.

Our guests will be able to meet Saudi students male and females, experience Henna, Arabic food, learn about Saudi Arabia's education, health system, development, taste tea and Arabic coffee, culture, currency, have their names written in Arabic, experience the seating arrangements in a tent that is going to be assembled in the room and then join discussions run by several Saudi students about women in Saudi, Islam, America in the mind of Saudi students, and many more activities that will hopefully provide a good cultural exchange between our Students and guests.

Our guests will also experience the Saudi hospitality through tasting free food that is prepared by some of the members of the Saudi Students House. We would like our guests to experience different aspects of the social and economical life in Saudi Arabia a side that is rarely emphasized in international media.

The following table shows a list of events taking place in the event (refer to the attached diagram of the room setup):

Table 1, 2	Welcome Tables containing books about Saudi Arabia, Survey, welcome flowers
Table 3	Have your name written in Arabic

What is Henna?

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

'Henna' is a flowering plant. It is native to tropical and subtropical regions of Africa, southern Asia and northern Australasia with an arid or at least seasonally dry climate.

It is a shrub growing to 6 m tall. The flowers are fragrant, produced in conical panicles 10–40 cm long, each flower 5 mm diameter, with four white petals. The fruit is a dry capsule 6–8 mm diameter, containing numerous 1–2.5 mm seeds.

Cultivation and uses:-

Henna is used as a dye, particularly in hair coloring, and temporary body art known as "mehndi" (also written as "mehendi" or "mehandi"). The dye is extracted from the dried leaf and petioles of the plant.

The natural dye is traditionally found in India, Pakistan, Iran, and North Africa, and also in expatriate communities from these countries. It is also widely used in the Arabic peninsula.

Preparing the Henna:-

To create henna, the leaves are dried and ground into a powder that is greenish-brown. Strong tea, lemon juice and essential oils (such as tea tree and lavender) can be added to release the dye from the powder, and sugar is mixed in to produce a mud-like consistency. The resulting paste needs to set for about 24-30 hours at room temperature to allow the dye to release fully. This can be sped up to as little as 1 hour by warming the mixture to 40 °C.

Allergic reactions to natural henna are rare, and typically do not cause serious health effects. Symptoms are usually apparent within a few hours, and are generally limited to mild itching, shortness of breath, and/or tightness in the chest.

*Use of henna as body art:-

Mehndi is the application of henna as a temporary form of skin decoration. This usage is popular in the Middle East, North Africa and South Asia as well as expatriate communities from these areas. It is usually drawn on the hands and feet, where the designs will last the longest.

Henna paste is usually applied to the skin using a plastic cone or a paint brush, but sometimes a small metal-tipped jacquard bottle used for silk painting (a "jac bottle") is used. The affected area is then wrapped with tissue, plastic, or medical tape to lock in body heat, creating a more intense color on the skin. The wrap is worn overnight and then removed. The final color is reddish brown and can last anywhere from two weeks to several months depending on the quality of the paste.

The patterns of Mehndi are typically quite intricate, and predominantly applied to brides before wedding ceremonies. However, traditions in Bangladesh, Kashmir and Sudan sometimes expect bridegrooms to be painted as well. In Rajasthan (northwest India), where mehndi is a very ancient folkart, the grooms are given designs which are often as elaborate as those for brides. In Kerala (South India), Henna is known as "Mylanchi" and is commonly used by the Mappila (Muslim) community during weddings and festivals.

Mehndi decorations became fashionable in the West in the late 1990s, where they are sometimes called "henna tattoos". This American marketing slang is inaccurate, since tattoos are defined as permanent surgical insertion of pigments "underneath" the skin.

Saudi Students to organize and Open house about Saudi Arabia

*SSH to hold an open house about Saudi Arabia on April 19th, 2006 between 4:30 PM and 7:00 PM at the Cannon room, University Center, Carnegie Mellon University
5032 Forbes Avenue, Pittsburgh, PA 15213,*

Last summer, king Abdullah of Saudi Arabia made an agreement with President Bush to increase the number of Saudi Students coming to USA, and as a result, Saudi Arabia decided to launch approximately ~5000 scholarships for Saudi students every semester to come and study in the USA during the coming five years.

These scholarships were in 14 technical fields related to medicine, engineering and technology. During the current spring semester, there were about 50 Saudi Students who ended up in different schools and Universities around Pittsburgh and more are expected to come in the next few years.

This increased flux of students encourages us to organize programs and events that would provide cultural exchange between Saudi and American Students to promote better understanding for each other which is one of the prime objectives of the Saudi Students House in Pittsburgh since education and awareness are ways to empower peace and tolerance.

Guests to the event are going to discover the rich heritage, values, unique culture, traditions, distinctive customs and history of an exotic and ancient land. The program includes many events directed towards introducing the culture of Saudi Arabia in many aspects.

Our guests will be able to meet Saudi students male and females, experience Henna, Arabic food, learn about Saudi Arabia's education, health system, development, music, culture, experience the seating arrangements in a tent that is going to be assembled in the room and then join discussions run by several Saudi students about Women in Saudi, Islam, America in the mind of Saudi students, and many more activities that will hopefully provide some good time for you and for your families.

WHEN: Wednesday, April 19th, 2006, 4:30 PM – 7:00 PM

WHERE: Connan room, University Center, Carnegie Mellon University, 5032 Forbes Avenue, Pittsburgh, PA 15213,

We hope that you would be able to send a reporter who would help in delivering our message to the larger community of Pittsburgh.

Saudi Students House holds event to promote national

Outside the University Center's Connan Room last Wednesday, pamphlets laid on tables provided information about Islamic terrorists, moral systems, and politics. Inside, Saudi Arabian students celebrated cultural values with fellow Carnegie Mellon students from all kinds of backgrounds.

To foster cultural exchange, the Saudi Students House (SSH) in Pittsburgh led the Saudi Open House last week.

The open house filled every inch of the Connan Room with spectators and Saudi culture.

The event featured Saudi games, food, art, dances, and tattoos. Students dressed in traditional Saudi attire greeted visitors and served authentic food to a long line of chattering guests.

Moustapha takes cultural and religious words and makes them into many different designs for paintings. She believes that this event will help students a lot.

"Once people see a different culture, they change their perception," Moustapha said.

The SSH held a similar event at the University of Pittsburgh recently. Basil As-Sadhan, a PhD candidate in Carnegie Mellon's electrical and computer engineering department and the president of SSH, said that the Pitt Open House received positive feedback that encouraged him and his fellow students to bring the event to Carnegie Mellon.

"In order to learn about others, we must present ourselves," As-Sadhan said. "It's a two-way exchange.... [Saudi] students in America are not only just studying. They are mingling and living with Americans as well."

Students of different backgrounds mingled quite a bit in the small room, and interested students could learn about Saudi traditions through PowerPoint presentations and display boards with printed information.

Nazeeh Al-Othmany, a graduate student in electrical engineering at Pitt, believes that such information exchange both educates and counters poor media representation of both cultures.

“I want people to take from this [an unwillingness] to surrender to media stereotypes,” Al-Othmany said.

Al-Othmany believes that Americans think of Saudi Arabia as a desert country with a lot of oil, and he said that the open house would encourage more interaction to change that perception.

He also said that the Saudis see America as a haven of high crime rate and killings on the street.

“The image of the United States in the eyes of Saudis is the image of Sylvester Stallone, Arnold Schwarzenegger, Bruce Willis, and Jerry Springer,” said Al-Othmany.

“If the American media is doing such a bad job at presenting its own culture, you can imagine how bad it’s doing at presenting other cultures.”

As for the influence of cultural exchanges, Al-Othmany believes that changing stereotypes through grassroots movements will eventually influence politicians.

He also emphasized the importance of more educational programs like delegations and student exchanges.

“We need to be proactive in presenting our culture and our values to the society so that people would learn about us and would not be scared of us, because people fear what they don’t know,” Al-Othmany said. “The only way to make these perceptions disappear is through interactions.”

Subject: Apology

Mr. Alothmany,

Thank you for your correction ,and I apologize profusely. It was a careless mistake in the interest of a catchy lead, and you're right, my choice of words was offensive, wrong, and counterproductive. Your position is completely justified. The phrase is both factually and stereotypically incorrect, and I will support any correction we print. I also hope that you will consider writing a letter to the editor (forum@thetartan.org) (to present your position, because it is a critically important issue. Thank you very much for pointing this out, and once again, I offer you my sincere apologies.

Yours,

Matthew McKee

Terrorism has neither religion nor nationality
http://www.thetartan.org/2006/5/1/forum/LTE\_terrorism

I would like to thank The Tartan its coverage of the Saudi Open House on April 19. The article ["Saudi Students House holds event to promote national awareness," April 24] was quite nice; however, I want to raise concerns about using the following sentence in the beginning of the article: "Pamphlets laid on tables provided information about Islamic terrorists."

The pamphlets contained statements made by many Saudi officials, scholars, and intellectuals condemning terrorism. They also contained statements from U.S. officials, including the 9/11 commission report that commended the level of cooperation of Saudi Arabia with the international community in combating terrorism. So I really don't think that the words "Islamic terrorism" are an accurate description of the contents of those pamphlets.

In addition, terrorism has neither a religion nor a nationality because there are fanatics within every ideology around the world. There are people who blow up abortion clinics in the name of Jesus (peace and blessings of God be upon him). We can't call them Christian terrorists; we can't even refer to those actions as "Christian terrorism" because the teachings of Christianity are exactly the opposite of these actions. We cannot accuse the entire faith of the actions of a few people who want to advance personal interests and agendas through twisted interpretations of religion.

Islam is a religion that is followed by 1.5 billion people around the world, and it does not teach terrorism. The Qur'an, which is the word of God revealed to the prophet Muhammad (peace and blessings of God be upon him), teaches us that killing one soul is like killing all humanity.

The whole purpose of our event was to educate the audience about our values, our customs, and our culture, and to show how distant they are from the stereotypical images usually displayed in the media.

I truly appreciate the efforts made by The Tartan in providing a good coverage for the event, but I am very concerned with the negative image that might appear in the minds of those who see the association of Islam as a religion with terrorism. We are a people for peace, and our faith, values, and culture are innocent of terrorism.
